Parents: How to Navigate Your Student's Complex Special Education Needs Now for the 2017-2018 School Year and Beyond

This is the time to plan your own back to school transition, anticipate your child's needs and start to build a framework for collaboration and a path for a successful school year. This can be a time of great anxiety for you and your child, so take a proactive approach to your child's education and set the stage for open communications during the school year.

TOP 10 STRATEGIES:

1) Review your child's IEP (Individual Education Plan) and/or 504 Accommodation Plan and be certain that you understand the goals, objectives, services, accommodations and staff who are key to implementing the plans. If you are starting the school year without these plans in hand, call the school ASAP and request a copy of the IEP or 504 Plan.

2) Familiarize yourself with the terms and acronyms in the IEP. Do you understand the language used in the IEP? For a useful guide to the ABC's of special education and related acronyms:

- 3) Request an informal meeting to review your concerns if there are questions about the IEP.
- 4) Confirm that the school staff has acquired the training in certain areas of delivering the IEP services to your child since the last PPT meeting. If the school's staff was required to obtain training in certain areas of delivering the IEP services to your child, have you confirmed that the school staff has acquired that training since your last PPT?
- 5) Request the scheduling of a formal PPT meeting as soon as possible to review and address your concerns, if your concerns are not addressed through an informal meeting.
- 6) Meet with the staff assigned to your child for the new school year. Discuss how you want to monitor your child's progress and how you want to be informed: daily, weekly, monthly, and what form the communication will take such as meetings, telephone calls, or emails.
- 7) Re-orient your child to the school environment to ease the level of anxiety. Plan for you and a school staff member to walk a child around the school building, especially if it is a new school environment for your child.
- 8) Discuss your concerns with your child's transition to the 2017-2018 school year. Did you notice any changes over the summer? Did your child's pediatrician or other professional have any development or medical concerns? If so, consider sharing this information with the school.
- 9) Communicate and advocate for your child with school staff during the 2017-2018 school year through regularly scheduled informal meetings, e-mails, or other forms of communication.

Special Note: Any issues and concerns that you may have should be addressed immediately, rather than allowing small problems and issues evolve into insurmountable obstacles.

- 10) Ensure that you are on the same wavelength with your child's teachers. Send your child's teachers a letter or e-mail that describes your perceptions of your child's: strengths, weaknesses, learning style(s), behaviors, social issues, and any other concerns that you may have for the 2017-2018 school year.

The Last Word: Your Child's Educational Future Matters

Start the school year with great expectations. If those expectations are not met to your satisfaction within a reasonable amount of time and your child continues to struggle, or you feel your child is achieving below his or her potential, you have rights to pursue as outlined in your "Procedural Safeguards." Those rights include a plan of action: reviewing your concerns at a PPT meeting, obtaining outside evaluations and pursuing other administrative remedies. Students (over 15 years old) familiarize yourself with transition planning, resources including the Transfer Bill of Rights available on the State Department of Education website: ct.gov.
